In the painful aftermath of brutal or lethal acts of domestic violence, survivors and family members of victims often find themselves in the headlines – as the unwilling and unwitting subjects of intense media coverage. The presence and support of a media-savvy advocate can help reduce the trauma and potential for revictimization when survivors and families deal with intrusive reporters. This workshop will offer tips and tools for advocates to build relationships with local media; to become sources and resources for the media; to reach out to survivors/family members; to serve as their liaison with the media, triage media requests, help prepare them for media interviews; and to help in efforts to honor lost loved ones and become advocates for social change.

Presenters will share a timeline of events leading up to the tragedy, the lessons learned, and how those lessons were applied within the community and to systems designed to protect domestic violence victims.
